Finding a solution to the shortage

Every day you struggle to provide top patient care. You're challenged to cut costs, boost efficiencies and enhance patient-safety measures. At the same time, you're also focused on providing rapid, high quality services to maintain short hospital stays. The current allied healthcare shortage presents unique challenges to the quality of healthcare that most hospital administrators cannot solve without help.

Our clients repeatedly tell us that finding quality healthcare professionals and maintaining budgetary levels are the two most difficult functions they perform. Beginning in the late 90s, hospitals began to recognize the shrinking number of allied graduates and the increasing demand for allied professionals. Up to 40% of the current work force will be eligible for retirement by 2010, while the number of allied graduates falls. To cope with the increasing demand, facilities are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on extensive online and classified advertising as well as expensive recruitment programs. All the while, the staff required to provide superior patient care is being sacrificed to man these efforts.

While there are other companies vying for your business, On Assignment Allied Travel's reputation for outstanding service, and demonstrated ability to find and place the finest allied professionals in the country, sets us apart from the pack. By taking a distinctly different People First approach to staffing, we are changing the world at work. On Assignment has been a leader in placing professionals in short-term, long-term and temp-to-hire job assignments for more than 20 years.

Safety and Quality Assurance

On Assignment Allied Travel is dedicated to providing you with top-notch, experienced professionals. Each candidate is screened through a three-tiered process beginning with a telephone interview. Second, pre-qualified candidates undergo an in-depth skills evaluation including tests and exercises to assess their ability level. Lastly, each candidate participates in a pre-hire assessment, including verification that the employee meets the licensing, certification and employment requirements in your state, and a thorough background check and drug screening.

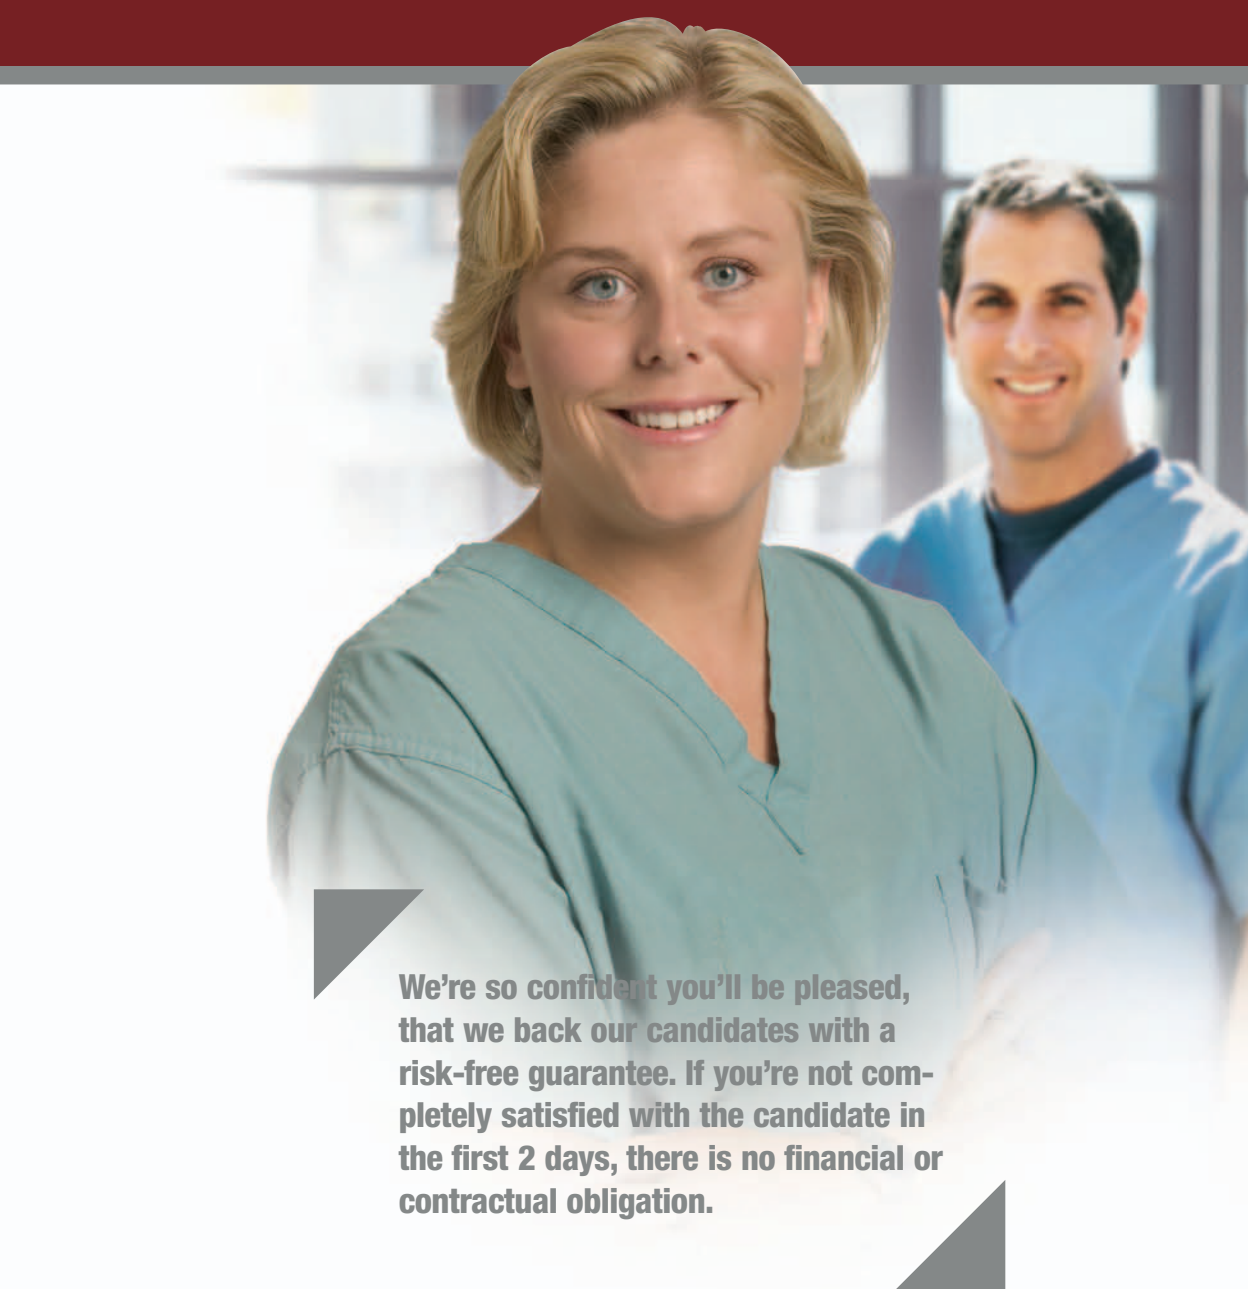

Once you have selected the candidate that best fits your organization, the candidate partakes in a detailed assignment orientation where we discuss pertinent information regarding the opportunity, your expectations as the client, and On Assignment's expectations as the employer. We ensure that the candidate is committed to the opportunity, guaranteeing you the right person for the job, every time.

As an added extra benefit, On Assignment has a comprehensive proprietary health and safety program. This fully OSHA compliant program also covers HIPAA and JCAHO training, providing you with the best-trained temporary professionals in the industry.

Are you looking for
